Half Time Piems - Ian Mcmillan

What's better at half-time than a pie- or even a piem!

Have some fun with these Piems written by the Barnsley Bard- Ian Mcmillan! and why not have a go making up some of your own?

THE HALF TIME PIE

The half time pie
The half time pie
Delight for the nose
Joy for the eye

The half time pie
The half time pie
Crust so hot
It'll make you cry

The half time pie
The half time pie
Shout your order
Don't be shy

The half time pie
The half time pie
Have you got the right change?
Well, I'll try.

They've just sold out
Oh why oh why
I'll have to wait
For the half time pie!

PIEKU

Like a haiku but about pies.

A haiku is a Japanese poem of three lines where the first line has five syllables, the second seven, the third five.

A sea of gravy
A rocky island of crust
The low mist of steam.

Round as a full moon.
Hot as the heart of the sun.
Lovely as the stars.

Can you make up your own pieku?

Can you finish this piem? What words do you think will fit in the XXX?

THE DAY I DROPPED MY PIE

It was a game
That was short on skill
They scored XXX
We scored XXX

The half time whistle
Blew so XXX
It woke up
The sleeping XXX

I dashed down
To get my XXX
Down the stairs
I had to XXX

First in the queue
Paid my money
Pie in my hand
The gravy XXX

I turned and then
An awful sound
My pie had crashed
To the hard hard XXX

I dropped my pie
Upon the floor
Then they scored three
But we scored XXX

This piem has great rhythm, can you read it out and clap along? Why not add some instruments, wooden spoons on pans, whistles and rattles. Why not record your family performing this piem and share it on the events page?
